PIONEER VALLEY ACADEMY

OPEN HOUSE

TO OUR FRIENDS . . .

Our friends saved us from the February blues
They helped us with the impossible subject
They listened, just when we thought nobody even knew we were talking.

It was our friends who pushed us forward when we were sure no more could be accomplished
Our friends understood the tears. No words needed.
They were happy, not jealous, whenever we succeeded
They got us out of bed to study.

It was our friends who deflated our egos, but built our self-esteem
Our friends made us feel worth something, because they needed us, too.

Work & Classes p. 83

Friendship can sneak up on you sometimes. Suddenly you find yourself dating a guy or girl you didn't even know existed only the year before. Or maybe you never cared for the neighbor across the hall, and one day discovered what a great sense of humor he had.

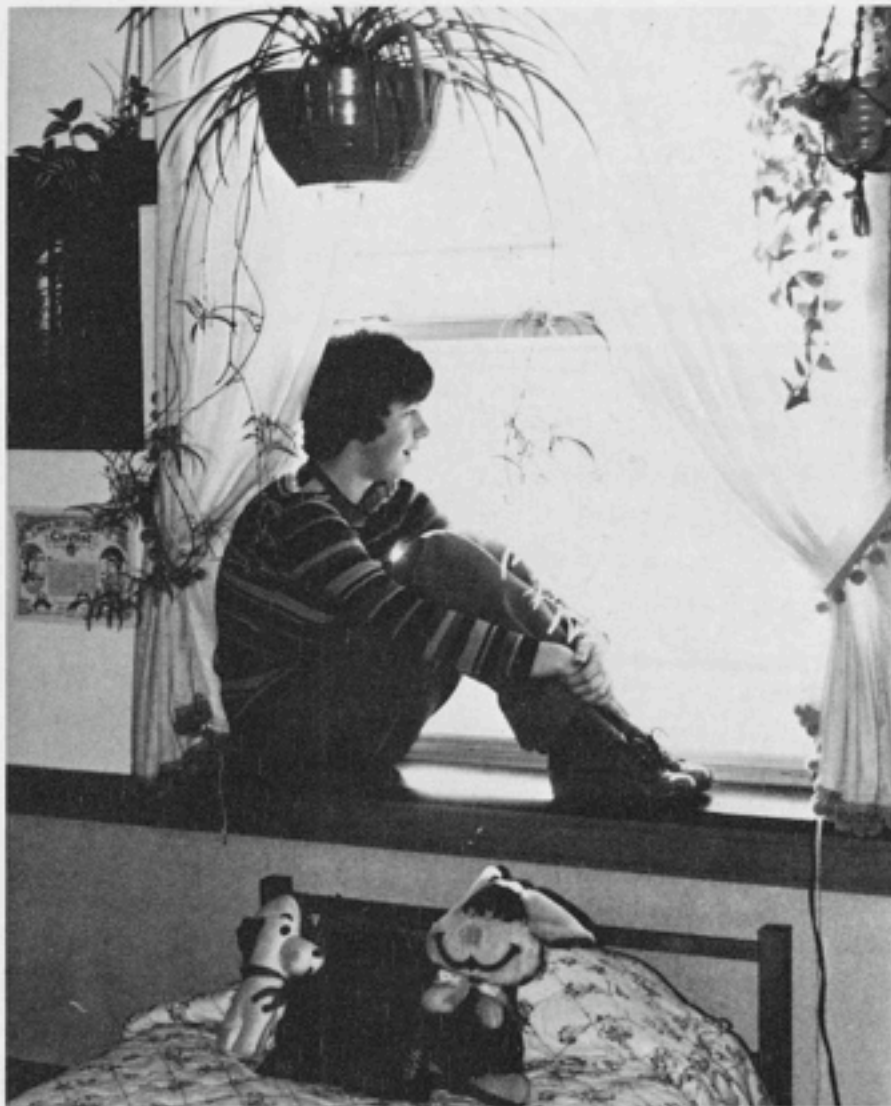

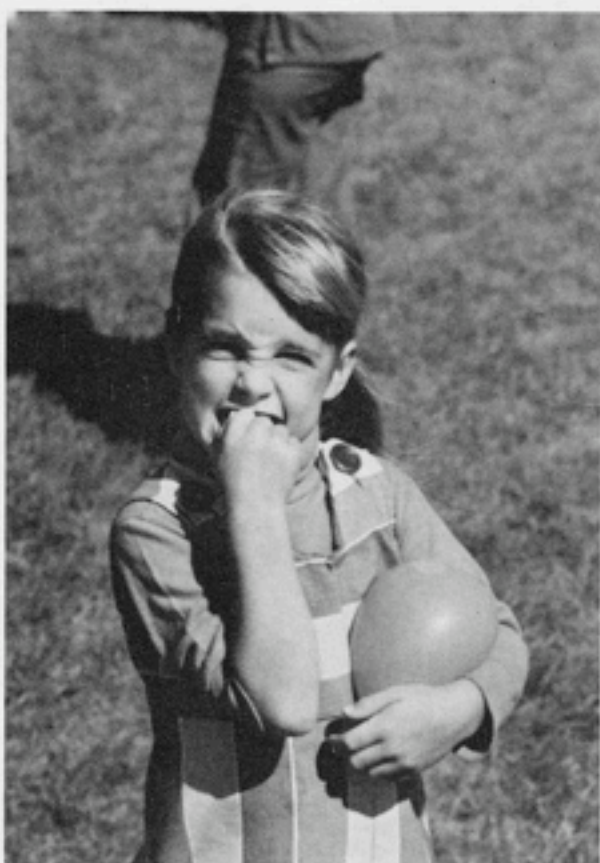

Whether a friendship begins on first meeting, or takes awhile to develop, it is something which is difficult to live without.

Going through academy we have made many casual acquaintances, but what about our closest friends; the people who know and understand us, and still like us in spite of everything?

Looking back on the years spent at PVA, it's hard to imagine how we ever would have made it through without our friends . . . Looking forward, it's hard to imagine what we will do without them.

Mr. Wolcott,

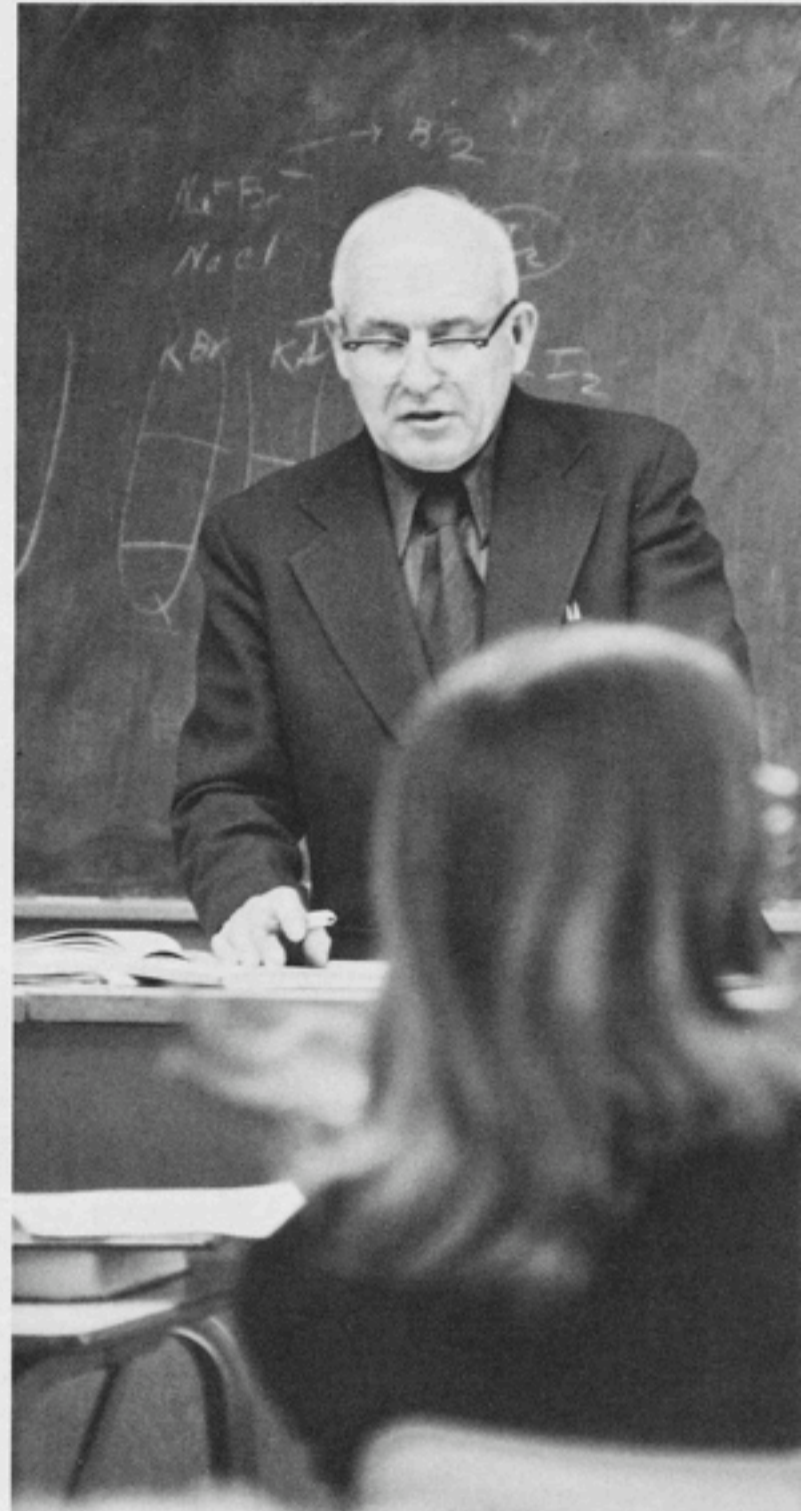

The name brings to mind lab books, test tubes, and Petri dishes. But even more we think of the smiling face, the friendly jokes, and the willingness to explain it again and again.

Mr. Wolcott,

We are thankful for your knowledge of science and of God. But we especially appreciate your ability to show us the connection between them.

Because of your dedication to PVA and its students for the past twelve years, we dedicate Citadel 1977 to you.

The Yearbook Staff

Mrs. Wolcott, concerned with other people's needs
More than with her own.
Full of energy, eager to give special help
And attention to those in need.
She was a lover of beauty, of flowers.
Mrs. Wolcott. Honest, kind, giving.

The memory of this beautiful lady
Will continue to encourage and cheer
Those who knew and loved her.

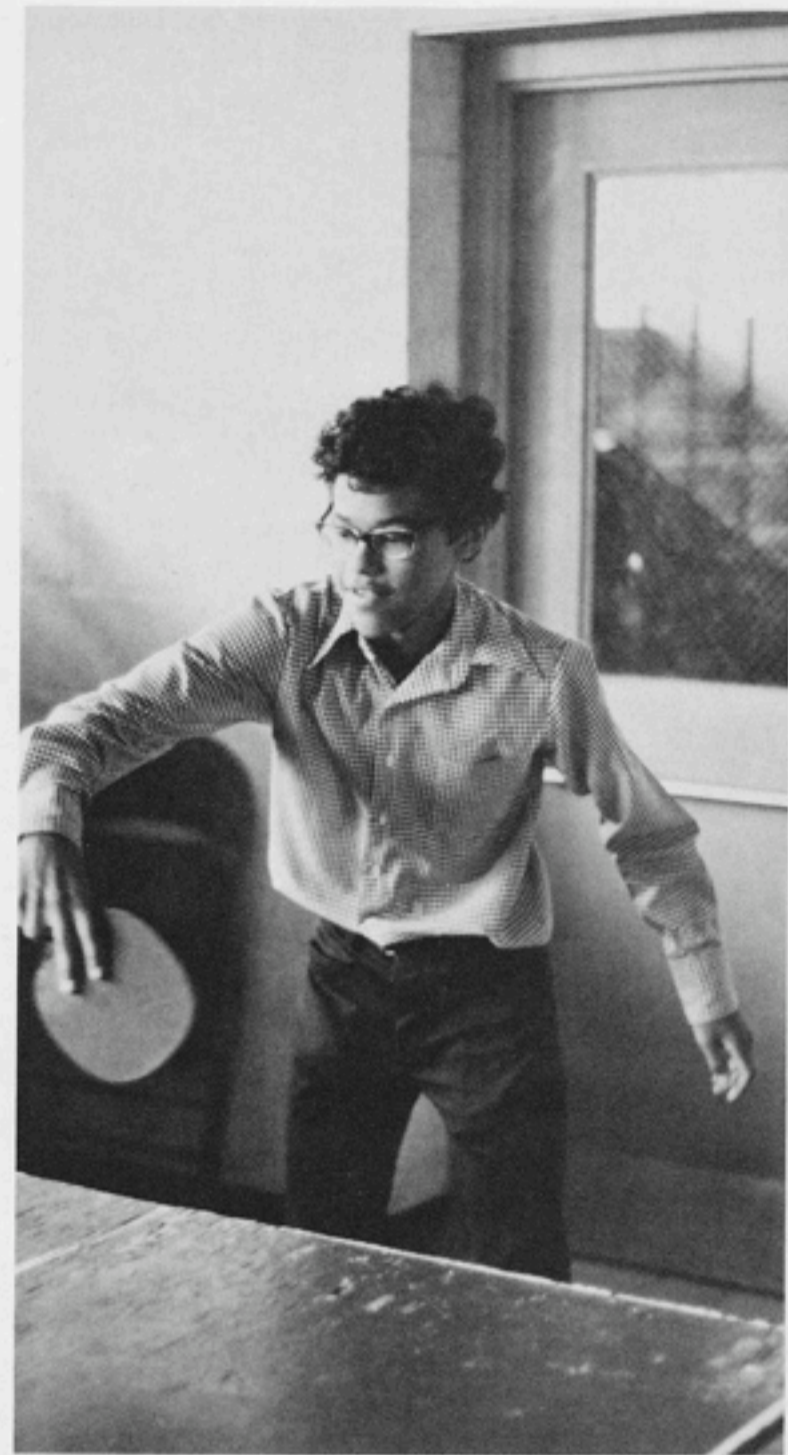

STRENGTH

FRESHMEN

When strange faces become familiar,
 When a lonely room becomes cozy,
 When the big school seems suddenly small,
 When a sense of routine sets in . . .
 That's when a Freshman knows he can make it.

SOPHOMORES

Sophomores are not
 The youngest or the oldest,
 The most or least experienced,
 The most serious or the most carefree.

But what they are is a group of students
 On the verge of everything,
 Learning and growing,
 Preparing for the future.

There are many similarities between the people and the countryside of New England. It is not easy to say whether the countryside mirrors the character of the inhabitants, or the people reflect the character of the natural environment.

But one thing is sure. Both the New England environment and the people who live in it have always stood for ruggedness, simplicity, and courage.

Eugene Andruss Leonard says, "The more one delves into the history of the American colonies, the more one is impressed with the magnificent courage of the men and women who came to the strange new land. For it was not the meek and the mild who braved the ocean, but the daredevils, the staunch and courageous — both the men and the women."

And neither is the countryside and weather of New England undefined or meek. Each season brings with it its own distinctive personality.

Summer is generally lazy, and subject to sudden outbursts. Autumn is showy, with its bright colors making the most of remaining life. Winter's characteristic is persistence. Spring brings new hope, a new optimism.

The green hills of Vermont, the glimmering sands of Cape Cod and the cliffs of Western Massachusetts are but a few examples of the character and beauty of New England.

From this unique area, and from its unique people, came new ideas, one of which was self-government.

The Separatists and the Puritans, two of the first groups to settle in the New World, left England in order to have a place where they could freely follow their consciences. Although they were not always tolerant of other people's beliefs, they did lean toward self-government from the start.

The signing of the Mayflower Compact is one evidence of this. Another example is the town meeting, which came into existence in order that each person could have a chance to express his opinions. This chosen situation was certainly a change from the situation they had faced in England.

Out of these not ordinary people came an even more select group, the religious leaders. These were the people who even suffered religious persecution among the persecuted.

Although names such as Thomas Hooker, Anne Hutchinson and Roger Williams bring to mind images of courage and honor, they were hardly heroes in their own time. Roger Williams was forced out of his home because of his beliefs, and many other religious leaders did not have the respect of society.

But because of these people religion still has a solid base in New England.

There are many lessons we, as New Englanders of today, can learn from our heritage. Courage, determination and unwavering optimism are just a few.

The early settlers did not know what they would find here, but they came anyway, in search of something better than what they had.

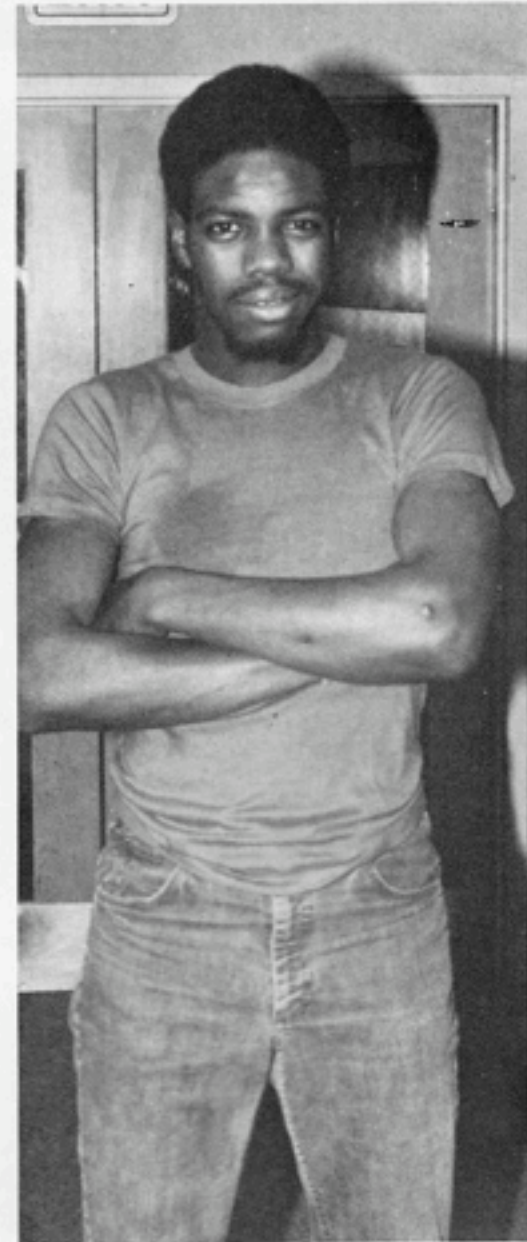

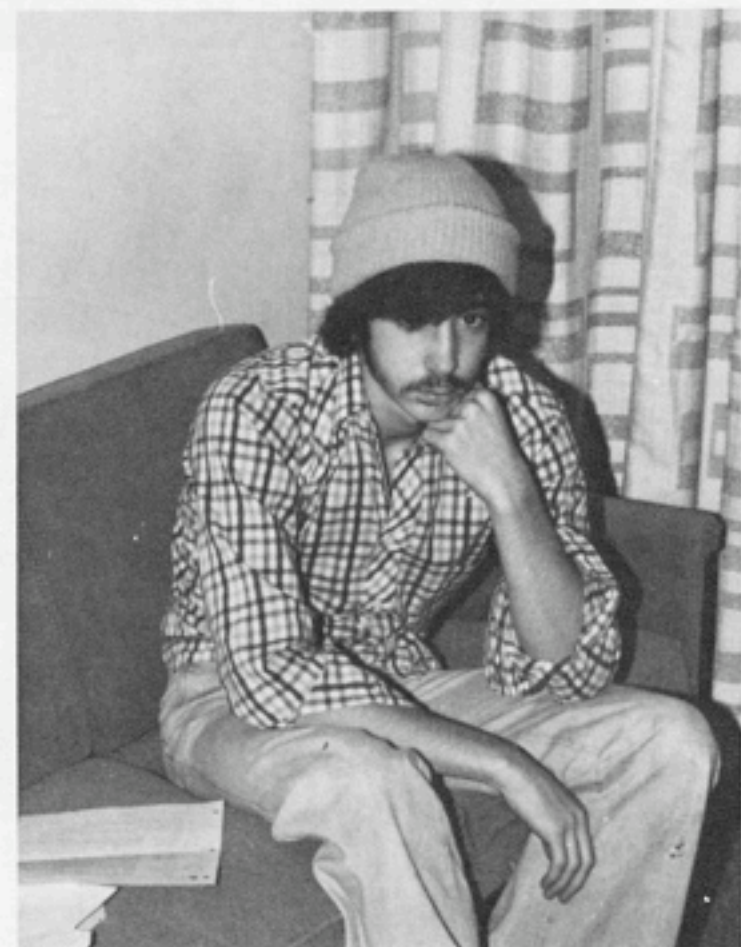

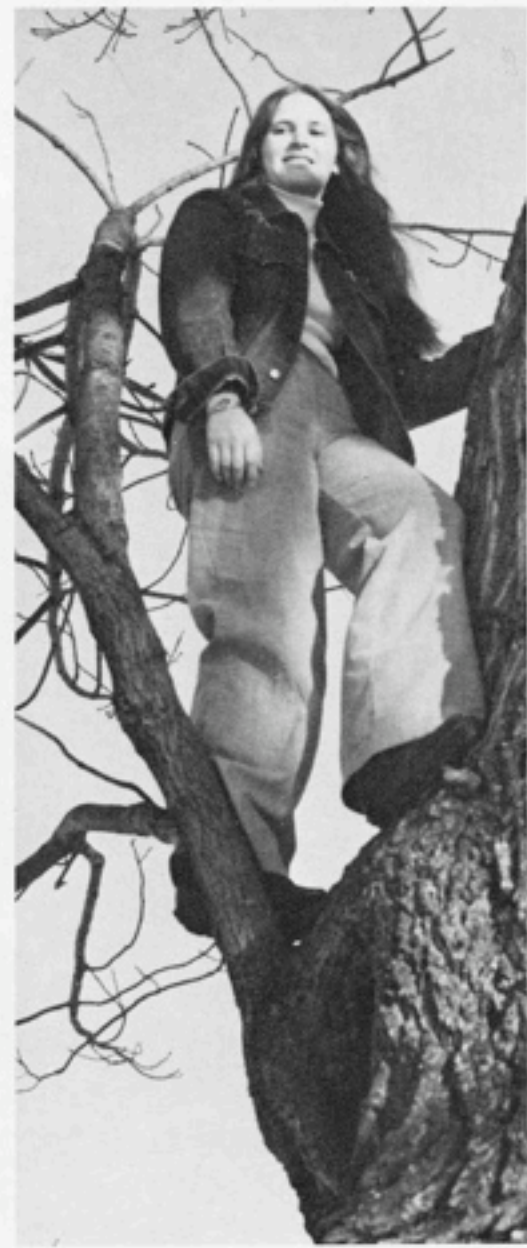

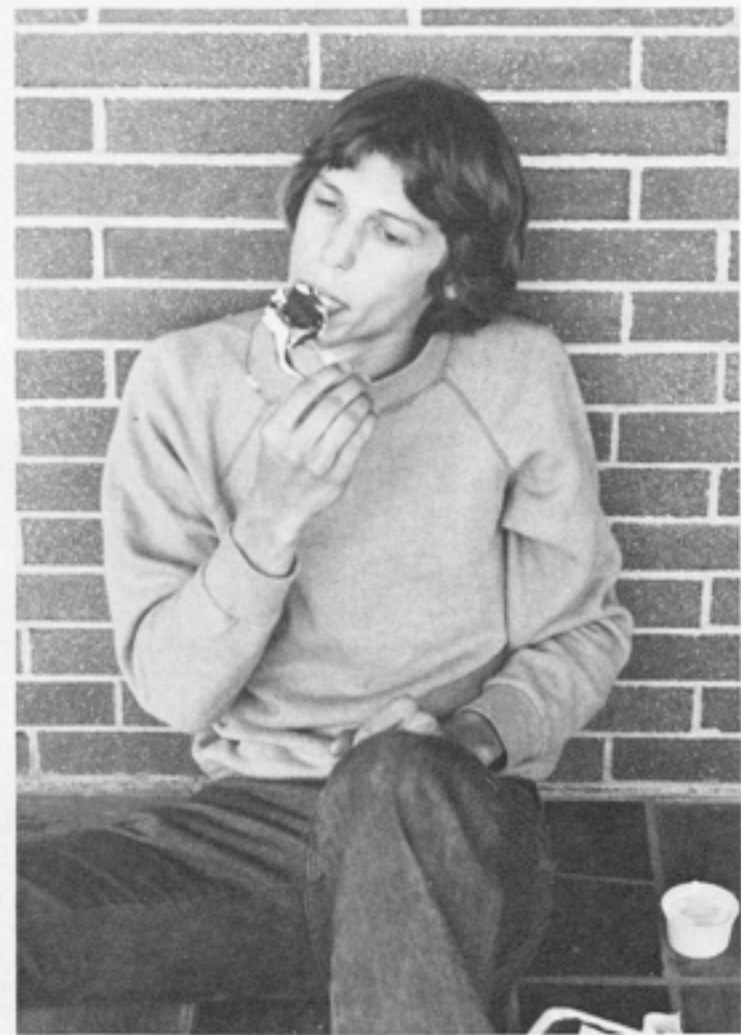

Life was difficult at first, but they did not give up. They overcame obstacles and turned disadvantages into advantages.

So, as we observe the beauty of New England, let us see more than just the moss-covered stone walls, the orange leaves or the green pastures.

Rather, we should let the countryside constantly remind us of the courage and determination of our ancestors, who brought about the freedom we now enjoy.

OPEN HOUSE

Remember how the girls fussed and fretted over
What to wear and
How to have their rooms
For weeks before Open House?

And how they anxiously awaited reply
To the pink invitations?

Remember the nervousness on Sunday —
The Day —
The last minute touches,
The final checks . . .

And remember how fast the evening went by?
Before the magic of
The softly lit rooms
And dainty decorations could be wholly contemplated
It was all over . . . until next year.

CHRISTMAS SUPPER

The sound of gentle Christmas carols,
The scent of fresh pine branches,
The taste of delicious food,
Candles and reflections of candles
Glowing endlessly . . .

A special evening for a special season.

JUNIOR-SENIOR BANQUET

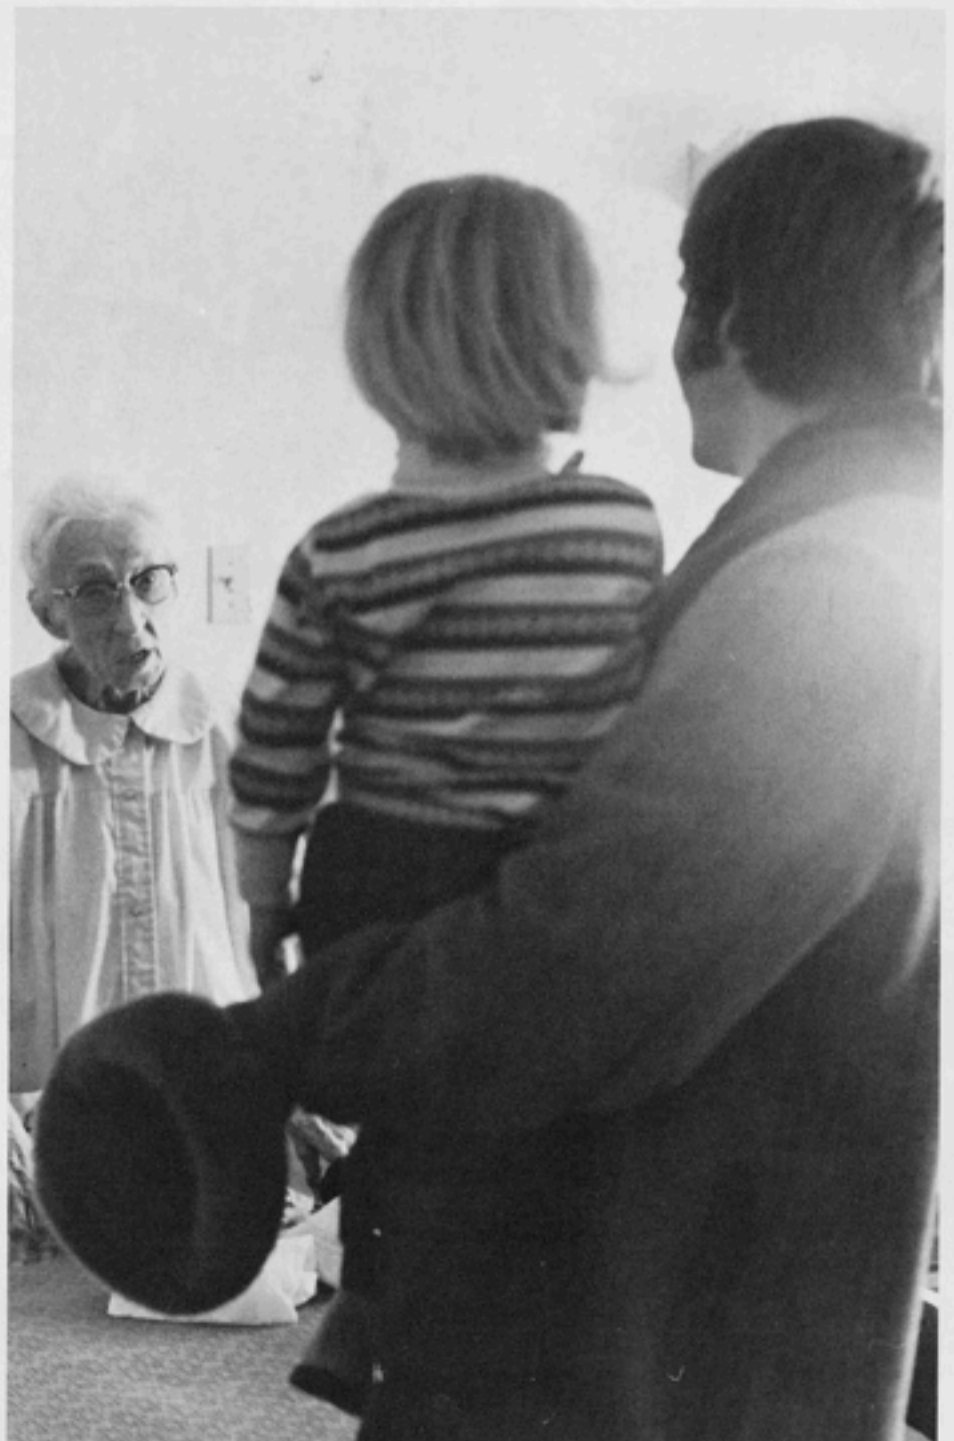

Juniors and Seniors
Wearing new clothes and flowers.
Underclassmen in blue jeans,
Saying good-bye to their older friends.

Onion soup, salad, manacotti.
"Moon River" and "Hello Dolly".
Cameras flashing.
"Monkey's Uncle"

Icy cold buses
Stuck in the snow . . .
In bed by midnight.

RELIGIOUS ACTIVITIES

It is possible to give away and become richer! It is also possible to hold on too tightly and lose everything. Yes, the liberal man shall be rich! By watering others he waters himself.

How could anyone forget
The rude 6:00 a.m. bell,
The ride to work,
The sleep-hazed worships,
The walks to first class that never took long enough,
The forgotten assignments,
The bloopers at work, or
The up-until-midnight project papers?

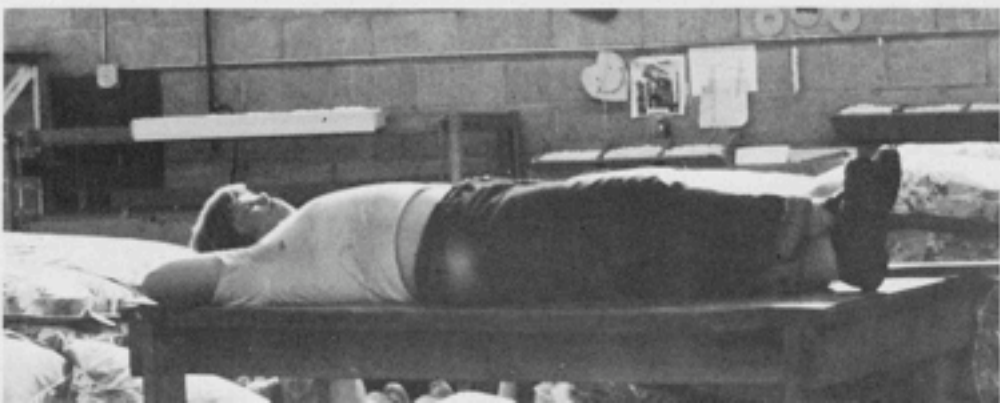

We'll never forget . . .
Whether we'd like to or not.

We may not remember
The formal handshake before,
But we will remember
The watermelon fight after!

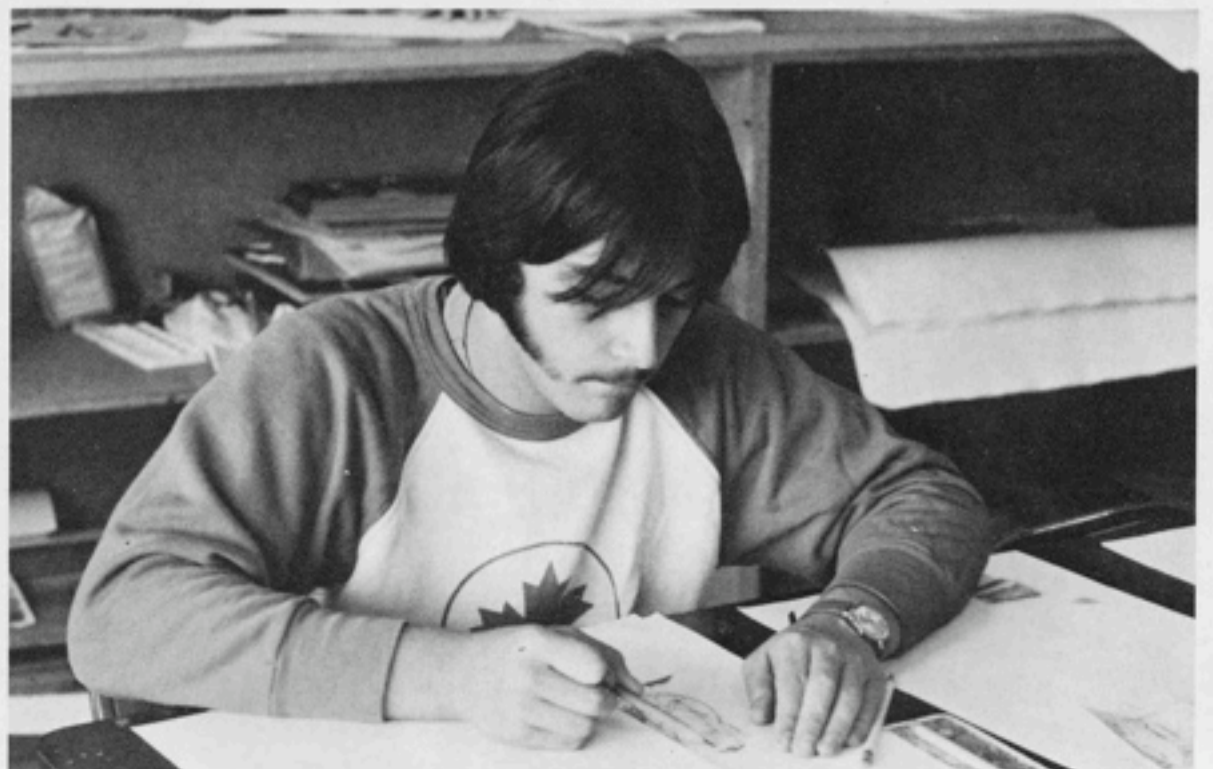

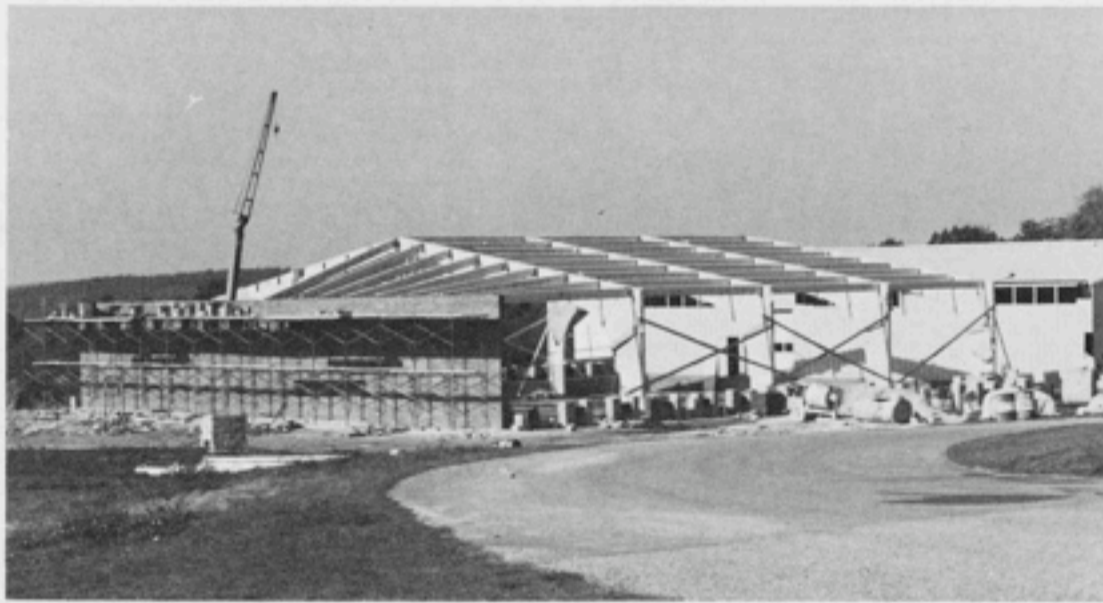

We may not remember

But we will remember the blisters!

Formal suppers may be forgotten,
But who could forget
Reverse Courtesy Day,
Hat Day,
Name Tag Day or School Colors Day?

Thank you, A.S.B., for the memories.

THE WORLD WOULD BE A BETTER PLACE WITHOUT SICKNESS

It would be great if disease and illness did not exist — but they do. Because people get sick, there is a need for people with varied skills to care for them and help their recovery. At New England Memorial Hospital we are concerned that our patients not only recover from their physical disorders, but that they also find mental and spiritual healing. To support our aim "to make man whole", we have the most dynamic health education program in all of New England. We enjoy the reputation of a hospital that cares about people and tries to keep them out of the hospital by teaching principles of healthy living.

WHY NOT CONSIDER JOINING OUR HEALTH TEAM?

This year
We learned through work and play,
Through hardships and frustrations.
Our friends guided us,
Our own mistakes taught us, and
Teachers struggled to educate us.

The school year is over, but, hopefully,
We will go on learning.

The End
